Folk We Touch in Passing

By Julia
Chandler

SHE DIDN'T BELONG.

(Copyright, 1916.)

The Woman gave her strength, her courage, and her youth in equipping the Girl that she might avoid her mother's poverty and mistakes, firm in her faith that in their future companionship lay her happy reward.

Blinded to the real thing beneath by the brilliance of his veneer The Woman married The Man while she was too young to know much of life or the men who walk its way. And when The Girl was yet a tiny tot clinging to her frock The Man betook his worthless self to other regions and The Woman heard of him no more.

At first she was heartbroken, for despite his neglect and improvident nature, he possessed a charm that had prevented the love she bore him from quite dying out. But after a little, when the days of her youth had gone, and she realized how despicable had been his conduct toward her and the baby he had left in her keeping, The Woman set herself to forget him. So it came about that in place of the love of her youth a great bitterness grew in her heart toward The Man.

And all the love of her nature reverted to The Girl. The Woman loved her better than her own life, and she made up her mind that she should be shielded from all the rough places in life; guided around a too early marriage through an equipment for life that would fit her to do splendid things for herself without the aid of any man.

So The Woman watched the little flower in her keeping grow and unfold and become sweeter day by day, and the heart of her was so proud that it was as nothing to her that she toiled through all the long day and half the night that The Girl might be spared contact with hardship of any sort whatsoever.

When The Girl was ready for college The Woman, although yet far from middle age, was gray, and stooped, and weary. But no one knew of the weariness because hers was a courageous heart and never complaint rose to her lips of the unceasing work.

But when The Woman saw that even her greatest effort was inadequate to the demand of The Girl's higher education it seemed to her that the whole of her sacrifice through all the years was a futile thing if now she must fail in the further development of the young life.

So she held counsel with herself and no word of her reason escaped her when she decided to sell the one thing of value she possessed—the little home that had been her father's wedding gift to her.

To The Girl she said it would be too lonely for her in the house after she had gone away to college, and unaccustomed to think for herself, The Girl accepted the explanation of the stupendous sacrifice, and went her way to acquire more expensive tastes and more snobbish friends along with her degree of scholarship.

And through the years of her education The Woman spent what there was left of her fading strength—going her work-a-day way with yet a smile on her lips, believing in The Girl and looking ahead to the years after her home-coming when the younger hands should steer the wheel, and she should rest from her labors in the sweet and gentle companionship of her daughter.

Happiness of seeing The Girl's graduation was denied The Woman. When the day came The Mother lay in a hospital cot too exhausted by work to care very much about getting well. Until she saw The Girl. The radiant young presence gave her courage to care—that is, until The Woman heard her talking in low tones to The Man Person who had accompanied her from college, and shadowed her footsteps thereafter.

"I am troubled about mother," said The Girl to him in a low voice. "She's been a brick, of course, but I can't just see what we shall do with her. To give her a home with us wouldn't be fair either to her or to ourselves—she wouldn't BE-LONG in our set, and we would all be horribly uncomfortable."

"Of course," sympathized The Man Person, "she would be a bit of a drag, but never you worry. We'll fix her up somewhere else—er—a bit out of the way, you know."

And The Woman, lying ill, HEARD.

She turned the eyes that had grown dim with too many tears full upon The Girl; saw the troubled young face turned toward her fiancé; pictured herself as she had plodded through all the years stamping out her own youth for the sake of the little one she had so loved; saw those ahead—bitter, desolate years, ostracized from The Girl and the life she planned for herself, and suddenly the will to get well went out of the heart of The Woman and she turned her face to the wall of the hospital ward.

And when, a few days later, the doctor watched the discouraged spirit slip out of its hampering shell he could do nothing.

"For," he told the nurse beside him, "The Woman lacks the wish to get well."

GUARDSMAN, HELD FOR SHOOTING, SET FREEHarold B. Wesley Wins Freedom Following Gen. Wood's Order.

Harold B. Wesley, private of Company F, District National Guard, who has been confined to the guardhouse since August 13 for the accidental shooting of Private James J. Spaulding on that date, will be released immediately, following Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood's disapproval of the proceedings of the militia court-martial which sentenced him.

Gen. Wood in general court-martial order No. 600, now on file in the War Department, stated that the court had changed the wording of the counts against Wesley during the trial and therefore had not tried him for the cause of action stated in the original summons. The words "accidentally" and "without due caution" were substituted in the court proceedings for "wilfully and feloniously."

Gen. Wood's disapproval order holds and the prisoner will be set at liberty.

SCORES WILSON FOR VACILLATING POLICYSimon Wolf Says President Should Have Been Firm Like Blaine.

"Read this to the minister of foreign affairs. Outrages on American citizens must stop, not next week, but now. And if they do not the entire power of this government will be brought to bear to stop them."

The above is the text of a cablegram sent out by James C. Blaine, Garfield's Secretary of State. It was submitted to the members of the Hughes Club attending the dinner given by the president of the club, William R. Harr, by Simon Wolf, who made a stirring address on Republicanism.

Mr. Wolf in his address contrasted the weak and vacillating policy of the administration in dealing with Mexican affairs, with the firm attitude of the government during Garfield's administration, and suggested that it would have been well for the present administration in dealing with the outrages committed upon American lives and property in Mexico, to have profited by the cablegram sent to the Mexican Minister, as quoted above.

Oliver Metzger, chairman of the campaign committee, informed the meeting that he was making arrangements for the Hughes Club and its friends to attend the meeting to be held in Baltimore on October 11, when Mr. Hughes is to speak.

MR. AND MRS. GODFREY
WEDDED FIFTY YEARSGolden Anniversary Celebrated at Westminster Street Home.

On the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Eliaahop D. Godfrey received the congratulations of nearly 150 of their friends and relatives, who gathered at their home, at 923 Westminster street, last night. The home was decorated with flowers and palms.

Three of the guests at the wedding party fifty years ago were present last night—Mrs. R. V. Belt, who was at the wedding as Miss Josie Kirkwood, and her sister, Mrs. Thomas C. Newton, who was then Miss Bettie Kirkwood, and also Mrs. A. N. Hughes. Mrs. Hughes was Miss Elizabeth Smoot.

Mr. and Mrs. Godfrey appeared in the best of health. Mr. Godfrey related how they were married here in Washington in '66, when he was a youngster fresh from four years and six months' service in the civil war. He said he lived here until '68, when they went West, where they reared their family of four children, returning to the Capital in 1891 and remaining here.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE
WANTS TREES TRIMMEDCommittee Also Urges Beautifying of Potomac Park Entrance.

Untidiness of the Twenty-sixth street entrance to Potomac Park was called to the attention of the parks, highways, and bridges committee of the Washington Chamber of Commerce at a meeting yesterday.

It also was suggested that trees in many residence streets are in need of trimming, as the boughs extend so far over the highways from both sides as to form an arch of dense foliage. Members had noticed numbers of valuable shade trees partly decayed and in need of immediate attention.

The attention of Maj. Pullman, superintendent of police, will be called to the fact that traffic on Georgia avenue is becoming increasingly dangerous as a result of the failure of drivers of certain types of wagons, with trailers, to observe the rules of the road. These drivers, it was said, refused to draw to the right in response to signals from automobiles overtaking them.

MURDER WITNESSES FLEE.

Rochester, N. Y., Sept. 29.—Three witnesses who made damaging affidavits against Clarence O'Connell, naming him as an accomplice in the murder of Charles Phelps and Margaret Wolcott, have fled to Canada. They are Frank, Charles, and Clara Laskey, of Lockport. Another of the family, Clarence Laskey, was in court today.

Their disappearance further complicates the effort to prove that Charles Stielow is not the murderer of the couple.
